SUB RESPONDS

Eugene Weekly recently reported on a dispute between Emerald Public Utility District and Springfield Utility Board regarding which electric utility should serve parts of southeast Springfield. The article contained errors, which we would like to address.

First, to restate SUB's argument: Critical city services, such as police and fire, extend with city boundaries, and so should electric service. This allows for orderly, efficient planning and development, which is fundamental to affordable rates and reliable service.

When EPUD declined to meet with SUB on the issue, we initiated a validation action with the Circuit Court — an information gathering tool — not, as the article incorrectly states, an eminent domain proceeding. The article also states that the court ruled SUB does not have the authority to condemn EPUD infrastructure. In fact, the court concluded "SUB lacks the authority to condemn EPUD's facilities as described in Resolution 22-2," which did not include a review of real property interests.

The article also states that SUB has raised rates for years while EPUD's rates have recently remained unchanged. Your readers may be surprised to learn SUB's rates have been lower than EPUD's for decades, per the state of Oregon. The most recent analysis shows SUB's rates to be 40 percent lower than EPUD's.

We appreciate the opportunity to correct the record.

Jeff Nelson
General Manager
Springfield Utility Board

Editor's note: The story has been updated to reflect that SUB had filed a validation action with the Circuit Court to get permission to use eminent domain to take over EPUD's infrastructure, and that SUB does not have the authority to "condemn" the EPUD infrastructure servicing the 200 homes in Natron per their request. And while SUB's rates are indeed lower than EPUD's, the fact remains that SUB raised their rate nine times.

CATS AND DOGS DON'T PAY OFF ENOUGH POLITICIANS

It was disheartening, but no surprise, to learn that the Eugene City Council is considering drastic cuts in the city's support of the Greenhill Humane Society. But let's be realistic — the Eugene taxpayers cannot afford to fill the local property developers' stockings with MUPTE gifts and also support a bunch of indigent, un-housed cats and dogs.

Those dumb animals can't even spell "campaign funds," let alone contribute any.

Henry J. Bielefeld
Springfield

CUTTING GAS USE IS JUST HALF THE BATTLE

Throughout all the discussion about natural gas stove bans, there has been almost no discussion of reduction of energy demand. Fossil fuels bad? Just switch to electricity! To hell with the fish killed by hydroelectric dams! Ignore what electric car batteries are made from! What we really need is fewer stoves, fewer cars and fewer consumers.

Why do most environmental groups and society in general keep ignoring population growth and quality of life? Why do we keep making plans for expanding growth in our area? As Edward Abbey said, "Exponential growth is the ideology of the cancer cell." We wouldn't have a housing crisis if we didn't make it easy and attractive to move here. Big business and natural-resource-dependent industries thrive on increasing profit, so let's make it less profitable for them to operate in the southern Willamette Valley. We need local businesses, local foods, clean water and recreation opportunities to strengthen our economy and our environment, not big box stores and construction companies taking money out of our pockets and into their corporate headquarters.

I know this has been said many times, but do we want our region to become like Southern California? Do we even want to become like Portland? We need programs and policies to reduce energy and water consumption, pollution, forest destruction and human population. We need to value quality of life and resist endless growth.

LAFER HAS THE EXPERIENCE FOR 4J BOARD

To be a school board member, one has to do the homework.

It is not enough to campaign to "restore student success" out of the blue. You have to study our schools to know what is going on. You have to show up.

Gordon Lafer shows up. As a board member for four years he has visited elementary schools in the district that now, after two decades, have librarians once again in their buildings — thanks to actions he and the current board have taken. During his tenure, Lafer championed the innovative building trades program where high school students have built shelters for unhoused people. He understands how textbook adoptions, like 4J's new social studies curriculum, support students' understanding of their world. He listened to student activists and pushed for a new policy ensuring free menstrual products, an equity issue for underserved students who won't miss school due to the cost.

Simply put, actions speak louder than words. Lafer has supported student success by getting things done for literacy, student hygiene, curriculum adoption and field service opportunities. Our community will be best served if he has a second term to continue his positive work on the 4J School Board.

HAMILTON WILL BRING CIVILITY TO THE 4J BOARD

Over many years in our capacity as Eugene Education Association president and co-presidents, we represented all of the teachers and certified staff in 4J. We worked with many different 4J board members. Firsthand, we saw how important it was to have each member of the board working together respectfully as a team with no one member being more important or taking individual credit for successful, effective programs or decisions. Unfortunately, some members of the current 4J board are having difficulty recalling the behaviors and actions that made the 4J board a model of integrity and outstanding leadership in public education.

Change needs to happen, and Rick Hamilton is exactly the kind of person to help make that change. He is a gracious man who cares deeply about the youth of our community and in particular those children who have fallen between the cracks. Hamilton and his wife have deep roots in the community and firsthand experience, having had their children attend 4J schools. As a retired state trooper and certified diversity trainer, Hamilton has practiced skills in listening to different perspectives with a focus on respect. He understands that being an effective board member means being open, listening to all views, being transparent and showing courtesy.

Hamilton has the background, integrity and grit to be part of a board that works together openly. Hamilton is inviting to parents, staff and community, and most importantly, he will work collaboratively with all stakeholders to encourage and support every 4J student.

Jail Doesn't Stop Criminal Activity

AN ARGUMENT AGAINST THE LANE COUNTY JAIL LEVY

"I can't believe I'm actually hoping some of the kids on my caseload will land in jail. It's the only way in our system they'll ever get the services they need." We have heard this statement from adults concerned about youth unable to access behavioral health services in this community for more than 20 years. Yet despite many promises from elected officials, people of all ages still cannot access the behavioral health care, including addiction treatment, they need.

A "yes" vote on the current jail levy may fund programs for a few incarcerated teens and adults, but it also says yes to a system that does not address root causes and is not an effective community safety policy. This is why we volunteer for Healing Not Handcuffs, a community coalition that opposes the levy.

Half the people in Lane County Jail struggle with mental illness and/or substance addiction. In the National Survey on Drug Abuse and Health, Oregon last year had the second highest substance abuse rate in the nation, yet ranked last in access to treatment. Lane County budgeted $36 million for the jail last year, not including court and arrest costs. With 260 beds in use at the time, that meant $11,500 per month just to keep one person in a jail cell.

Those funds, if spent wisely in the community, could pay for mental health treatment, addiction recovery programs and youth development projects that would support many individuals toward wellness. Without services in the community, mental health programs in the jail make no sense.

The fear-based story that the jail is our most valuable resource for ensuring community safety is a myth. Researchers at the Prison Policy Initiative demonstrated that in 13 communities that initiated pretrial release programs, crime rates decreased or held steady once the pretrial release program began. Violent crime did not increase 10 years ago when reduced jail funding resulted in capacity-based releases in Lane County.

And, with decriminalization of petty drug crimes under Measure 110, pressure on the jail capacity will continue to drop, while we expect to see the expansion of addiction treatment programs as funding from the program reaches our communities.

Decades of research have shown that jails and prisons don't reduce criminal activity. People are safer in communities where poverty is rare and basic needs are met, yet we fund jails and begrudge funds for affordable housing, adequate health care, education and economic opportunities. We cannot accept the myth of innocents and "thugs," fueled by politicians manipulating white fears, any longer. As we see hate crimes increasing and gun violence in the news daily, instead of accepting the false promises of punishment, we should reject narratives of fear and retribution and courageously invest in healing and strengthening our communities.

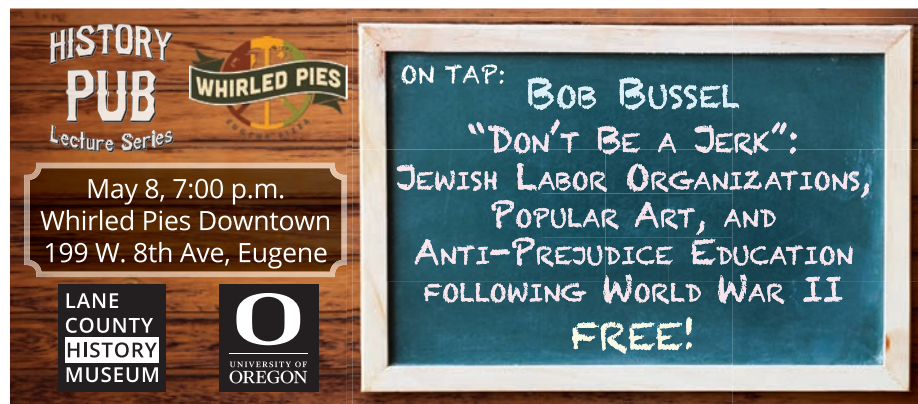

Municipalities all over the country are experimenting with restorative justice, which addresses accountability through consequences, not punishment. Consequences could mean loss of power and privilege or paying for medical and recovery costs for someone you harmed. Restorative justice is not "one size fits all." It puts the needs of the people harmed, and their families, at the center of each process.

Restorative justice harks back to Indigenous practices, and is growing in Lane County. The county has an restorative justice program already in place that works in tandem with the Circuit Court. The district attorney determines who can use restorative justice so only a few offenders and victims have access. Conflict Artistry, LLC, is another local site of restorative justice, inviting community members to access their program directly, prior to resorting to police and prosecution. If more community members were willing to attempt a restorative process and let our leaders know, we might experience true accountability and repair from harm.

Saying "no" to the levy is only a first step, to admit that the system we have doesn't make us or our children safer, and, more often than not, harms those caught up in it, as well as their partners and children. We must also invest in the care and services people need outside the jail. To create a community where the largest number of people possible can enjoy health, safety, dignity and belonging, we will have to step up with courage and a willingness to experiment. Compassion and reason point us in the direction of community-based rather than jail-based initiatives.

No Place For Hate

STUDENTS AT SPENCER BUTTE MIDDLE SCHOOL INCITE CHANGE TO 4J SAFETY REPORTING PROCESS

By Ella Hutcherson

On Tuesday, April 18, Spencer Butte Middle School students walked out of school to protest the way harassment is reported and responded to on their campus.

Their demonstration began a little after 2 pm and lasted through the end of the school day. According to 4J Communications Director Jenna McCulley, the original impetus for the protest came from the No Place For Hate student group, which is overseen by a faculty member and is part of the Anti-Defamation League's nationwide effort to develop anti-bias frameworks in schools and end harassment and bullying.

Students protesting were frustrated in part over what are referred in the school to as "green forms," or harassment reports. These forms, nicknamed for their color, are used by the Eugene 4J School District for students to file a complaint when bullying occurs. According to McKenna Bannister, an eighth grader at Spencer Butte and member of No Place For Hate, the forms fall short.

"A large issue of the green forms was there was zero response," Bannister says. "If there was a response, it was a very long time, up to three months. And a lot of kids who filled out those green forms really needed someone right then and there."

When 4J middle school students want to address bullying, harassment or other concerns, the first step is filling out the green form. The form prompts them to write a description of the incident and what they would like to see happen, along with information about the person experiencing the incident, whether that is the student filling out the form or someone else, and the person who caused the incident. It also asks if the student has a teacher or counselor supporting them, and if they would like that person present when speaking to administration.

On the other side of the form, the administrator is then supposed to fill out details, including whether or not the incident targeted any marginalized identities the student might hold, such as race or sexuality, identify outcomes or next steps following meeting with the student, and state whether the student or administrator feel that the issue is resolved.

But Larry Williams, 4J director of Equity, Inclusion & Instruction, says that students don't like having to fill out a form before getting the chance to speak with an adult.

"It's not personal enough to them," Williams says of the forms. "I think what we glean from it as adults is that sometimes they need to talk to someone."

In response to the walkout, Williams, along with others in the district, has been speaking with students on the

No Place For Hate leadership team to gather more information about their concerns and find a system that works for them.

Williams says the students believe that connecting with someone, such as a counselor or office staff member, closely following an incident is always preferable to just filling out a green form and waiting. He says that students feel the forms may continue to be useful in some instances, such as filing more general reports, and adults could fill out a green form following a meeting with a student if they felt it was necessary.

Bannister says that the Safe Oregon website is also being recommended as an additional tool for reporting, though she says it functions similarly to a green form, with students able to report a tip following an incident. Additionally, she and another student are vying for suggestion boxes to be placed in the school as another way to get issues addressed with more speed.

For the remainder of the school year, Williams says his team will be visiting other middle schools to see if the frustration with the reporting process is common throughout the district. His hunch is that Spencer Butte Middle School students' concerns are not isolated, and he believes that the work that needs to be done will benefit 4J middle schools holistically.

Williams was impressed by the students at Spencer Butte Middle School that he spoke with, saying they were "very mature beyond their age."

"They really stayed focused on what they need to feel good about the process," he says. "It was a pleasure." ■

A Back-Up Plan

EWEB PLANS TO BUILD A FILTRATION PLANT ON THE WILLAMETTE RIVER
TO PROVIDE A SECOND WATER SOURCE

By Brianna Murschel

All it takes is one disaster for Eugene to lose its primary source of water. Just one fire, one earthquake or one oil spill on the McKenzie River could affect Eugene Water and Electric Board's 23 million gallons per day of drinking water, resulting in panic and emergency actions such as treating water at home, relying on bottled water, reservoirs and more.

Eugene is the only major city in the Pacific Northwest to have a sole water source.

Karen Kelley, chief operations manager for EWEB, says if something major, like an earthquake, impacts the McKenzie River, "We have built five emergency water stations. And we're working on two more, where people could hopefully at least go to these emergency sites and fill up jugs" to take water home.

The single water treatment plant would likely not survive an earthquake because it does not meet the seismic standards to ensure the structure could resist such forces, Kelley explains.

With an investment of $100 million, EWEB plans to build a water treatment plant with a capacity of 19 million gallons a day on the Willamette River, upstream of Eugene and Springfield. "This is an expensive project. We know that," Kelley says. "We're looking at every possibility of getting legislative funding and other grants on board to help reduce that burden on our ratepayers."

As of right now, EWEB plans to start the design work in 2024 and it anticipates starting construction in 2026, Aaron Orłowski, EWEB spokesperson, writes in an email.

"I think we all need to be cognizant of having backup resources like water, especially in an area of the size that is served by that utility," says Travis Williams, riverkeeper and executive director for Willamette Riverkeeper. "I do wonder a little bit, though, how far $100-plus million dollars would go in thinking about water conservation? When you look at growing potential water scarcity, even in big rivers like the Willamette, we have less flow in these rivers and less flow into the reservoir" due to climate change.

"Our industry is constantly pushing for us to look for redundancy and resiliency through every part of the system," Kelley says. "So that's what we're looking at with the second source."

For years, EWEB has gone back and forth about whether or not to add a second water source location for Eugene on the Willamette River because of concerns including water quality.

"EWEB has been mulling over an emergency drinking water intake on the Willamette for several years now," Michelle Emmons, upper watershed program manager for the Willamette Riverkeeper, writes in an email. "If the intake comes to fruition, one possible positive outcome is that the Willamette's urban riverfront in Eugene-Springfield may become a higher priority for public investment in habitat restoration and clean water enforcement."

On the morning of April 20, a semi-truck crashed near the McKenzie River. EWEB reported that the fuel and oil appeared to be contained in the immediate crash area. Furthermore, no oil sheen had reached the river, according to David Donahue, EWEB environmental specialist.

The incident was a hint at how one major incident could spin Eugene residents into emergency measures.

As of now, EWEB is working through land use and permitting processes with the city of Springfield because the plant will be located in the unincorporated community of Glenwood, which Springfield has jurisdiction over. Also in the works for the utility company is to receive intake facility permits. Additional hurdles include supplementary permits and approval from the Oregon Health Authority and the Oregon Department of Environmental Quality. "And the list goes on," Kelley says.

"It's going to be a long road, but we're in the midst of it now," she says. ■

• Mayor Lucy Vinis spoke to the City Club of Eugene on April 28 about the city's efforts to combat climate change. She emphasized her support of the measure to ban gas in new construction, calling it “one step forward.” We’re watching the ban under a recent 9th Circuit Court of Appeals ruling that struck down a gas ban in Berkeley, California, in a victory for the fossil fuel industry. Vinis also added that she would support full-time pay for the mayor and city council of Eugene, calling it an equity issue. They currently make less than $20,000 a year. We agree — we need folks paying attention to our city and its people’s needs, and we won’t get diverse viewpoints if the job pays poverty wages.

• You should have your ballot in your mailbox by now. Grab your pen and sit down to do your civic duty. We did ours and talked to and researched a sea of school board hopefuls, some looking to make the world a better place and some, quite honestly, running to spew hateful views in public schools. You may not agree with our endorsements, but know we would never endorse hate.

• It was sad to see the long, well-written article on the front page of the April 29 New York Times about Craig Coyner's journey from mayor of Bend to a homeless person on the streets of that thriving city. When he died, his daughter said, “If he had been a dog, somebody would have rescued him long ago.” It’s a tale of the timber boom, mental illness and addiction — and a reminder we need to do more for the homeless.

• Have you noticed that the deer in your yard gobble up the tulips, but don't touch the daffodils? Those blossoms are lucky — and contain the alkaloid lycorine, making them unpalatable to Bambi and his ilk. We hear that in some parts of the East Coast, where the deer population is even higher than here, they are even eating rhododendrons. We don't look forward to that, as we love the colorful rhodies of the Northwest.

• Do you need a break from the wretched news of the day, from still more horrendous shootings to the fall of the sort of Democratic hopefuls we thought could make a change? Then pick up the best-of-seven series between the Golden State Warriors and the L.A. Lakers. Watching Steph Curry score 50 points and do so much more against the Sacramento Kings was great fun. but LeBron James and the Lakers are a different challenge. We'll still bet on Curry and the Warriors.

May 4 is Star Wars Day (and if you don't know what we mean, it's May the Fourth, get it?), and that's the day you will have your ballot in one hand and your copy of Eugene Weekly's election endorsements in the other. It's less like having a lightsaber and more like trying to use an amorphous force — known as democratic elections — to manifest change.

We spend hours interviewing candidates for stories and endorsement, researching them and attending forums all over the county and cities from Eugene City Club to Springfield Chamber of Commerce. We are small and fierce, but we can't interview everyone in every race — yet we do try to interview every candidate who asks us to. If we didn't endorse in a race, it's because we didn't feel like we had enough information. If we did endorse and put the candidate's name in bold, then read what we think and make up your own mind!

Please check out our stories and interviews with candidates in print and at EugeneWeekly.com, tagged Election 2023. And if you want to join your fellow citizens and weigh in, mail what you think to Letters@EugeneWeekly.com.

EUGENE CITY COUNCIL

WARD 7 two year term

Lyndsie Leech

Barbie Walker

Janet Ayres

Lyndsie Leech by a landslide. If we had to lose a good city councilor like Claire Syrett to a baseless recall, let's at least replace her with a thoughtful candidate. Janet Ayres is backed by the anti-mass transit NIMBY crowd, and Barbie Walker didn't seem to have thought through her positions, but based on her $2,000 payment to failed right-wing nut job congressional candidate Alek Skarlatos's campaign manager, she's not a great match for an area that includes the Whiteaker and River Road.

Leech, in contrast, has pondered her positions on everything from policing to homelessness to mental health — specifically figuring out ways for the city to implement mental health-related policies in the community. Leech has a solid background of volunteer and paid work for progressive nonprofits, from the FOOD For Lane County Grassroots Garden to the Territorial Parent Association and WellMama, Inc., for which she is now executive director. She's a good fit.

LANE MEASURE NO: 20-340

Yes. Renewal of jail and youth services five-year levy

In the past we have suggested both no and yes votes on this levy. On the surface, defunding the jail seems like the way to go. But history reminds us that Ronald Reagan's reduction of federal spending on mental hospitals sent people back to the states, which didn't take care of them, either. The jail has become a defacto mental health institution, and it shouldn't be, but sending folks back to the streets and not holding folks with violent felony offenses doesn't work, either. This levy is a five-year renewal of the one that's been in place for a decade. It's an ongoing stop gap, and we need to get going on a better way of dealing with crime and mental health, but until that's in place, we're going to say yes on the renewal.

CITY OF EUGENE MEASURE NO: 20-343

Yes. Five-Year parks and recreation operations and maintenance local option levy

Parks, open space and recreation are dear to our hearts. We'll take this bully pulpit to remind the city that we'd like to see the money spent on the parks — not on evicting unhoused campers with no place to go.

WILLAMALANE PARK & RECREATION DISTRICT

DIRECTORS (Vote for three)

Chris Wig

Johnny A. Lake

Kiersten Muenchinger

Cj Mann

Greg James

Angela Miceli Stout

Chris Wig and Johnny Lake are both solid progressive incumbents on the board; aspiring newcomer Kiersten Muenchinger, a design engineer who has worked with Walt Disney Imagineering, heads the Department of Product Design at the University of Oregon and might bring an interesting perspective to Willamalane.

Kevin Alltucker

Bob Baldwin

This is a race with two solid candidates. Both are LCC grads and care deeply about the school. Alltucker has a strong background in working on issues affecting formerly incarcerated people and Baldwin has a strong union backing and background. Honestly, you can't really go wrong with either, but Alltucker got our nod for what we see as an ability to understand Lane County's many political sides, and come out on the side of the students and education.

EUGENE SCHOOL DISTRICT #4J

POSITION 1

Tom DiLiberto

Michael Bratland

Juan Carlos Valle (withdrew)

Tom DiLiberto is a quiet, unassuming longtime educator. Michael Bratland is a dentist who sponsored a Back the Blue billboard with former TV news personality-turned-conspiracy theorist Rick Dancer, and who is endorsed by the anti-LGBTQIA+ Kids 4 Success PAC. DiLiberto it is.

POSITION 4

Rick Hamilton

Gordon Lafer

Retired Oregon State Police Trooper Rick Hamilton gets our surprise support to join the 4J school board. More than three decades in the front ranks of law enforcement has left him not only without a shred of bitterness but with a deep understanding of and sympathy for people facing challenges from mental illness to poverty and homelessness. A recent mental health tragedy in his own family gives him even deeper insight into institutional failures of our society, particularly to African Americans such as himself. Hamilton's friendly, solid demeanor should be a calming and unifying influence on the fractured board, whose meetings have sunk into embarrassing chaos over the past two years.

POSITION 5

Jenny Jonak

Grant Johnson

Jenny Jonak is a lawyer, a Korean American mother of a special needs daughter and is someone with an outstanding record of service that includes such wide-ranging organizations as the Lane County Bar Association's Diversity, Equity and Inclusion Committee and the Friends of the Eugene Public Library. She lives just far enough outside town to bring a rural perspective to this largely urban school district.

POSITION 7

Morgan H. Munro

Timothy Sean Sutherland

Ask Morgan Munro a question about schools and she pops up with an answer. Her answers are well researched, based on actual facts and thoughtfully articulated. The Eugene School Board could use a dose of her graceful wonkiness as it tries to deal with such problems as student mental health and suicide, teacher burnout, campus security amid the 2nd Amendment plague, and the deep dysfunction that is paralyzing the board itself (and, yes, she has a plan for that). Vote her in.

JUNCTION CITY SCHOOL DISTRICT #69

POSITION 1

Ryan Ceniga (unopposed)

We checked, and since the Junction City School Board is not a “lucrative” elected position, Ryan Ceniga can indeed run again for school board while on the Lane County Board of County Commissioners. Since we haven’t been blown away by the current county board’s voting against female leadership, we’re definitely not endorsing Ceniga to continue his position in public education.

It's a study in contrast that is melodic. Alice Howe and Freebo — she of the naturally rich voice that brings soul to roots music; he the iconic rock and blues bassist best known for a decade-long collaboration with Bonnie Raitt — have teamed up for a thoughtful and well-received album, and they will perform at a house concert in Eugene. Howe and Freebo, who have been working together on stage and in the studio since 2017, are touring in support of Howe's latest album, Circumstance. It was released in April and produced by Freebo at the legendary FAME Studios in Muscle Shoals, Alabama. Howe displays in the album her vocal range and writing chops with songs that take the listener on a wonderful journey across the Americana soundscape. She was selected the best female artist in the 2023 International Acoustic Music Awards. Besides his work with Raitt, Freebo has also recorded with Crosby, Stills and Nash as well as Maria Muldaur, John Mayall, Ringo Starr, Dr. John and Neil Young.

Singer-songwriter Alice Howe and bassist Freebo perform in a house concert 7:30 pm Wednesday, May 10, at 70 E. Howard Avenue. $15. — Dan Buckwalter

PAINTER JON JAY CRUSON SHAPES THE WORLD
EAST OF THE CASCADES INTO EXQUISITE AND DETAILED ABSTRACTION

The way Jon Jay Cruson tells it, his best work grows out of regular fast-paced solo road trips. He gets in his nearly 10-year-old Toyota RAV 4, heads across the Cascades and drives to places such as Dufur, a small town in Oregon's wheat-growing country along the Columbia River, and Pendleton, in the state's far northeast corner.

Along the way he examines the landscape with a keen artist's eye, taking note of shapes, colors and textures, sometimes stopping to look carefully for a moment, perhaps jotting down a line or shape in a notebook, but rarely getting out of the car. After as few as three days examining the landscape from the road, he returns to his home studio in Eugene and begins assembling notes and memories into complex compositions worked out with acrylic paints on canvas.

“These road trips are very important to my work,” Cruson says of these journeys, which he makes at least twice a year, in the spring and fall. He calls them a catalyst for his art. “They give me a chance to look and think. And there is a freedom to road trips outside the studio.”

You can see the results of this artistic travel in Contemplate: New Works, which opened April 7 at the White Lotus Gallery downtown.

In the large paintings in his show, Cruson uses bright acrylic paint on canvas to combine images from his travels, sometimes incorporating source material from as many as five different locations in one painting. None of the paintings, as a result, shows an actual place; instead they create abstract patterns, almost like a collage, often with a noticeable passage of pure white running through the image.

Cruson is one of those rare birds in today's art economy — an artist who works full time at painting and makes enough money to live comfortably.

After growing up near Sacramento, Cruson studied art at the University of Oregon, where he got an MFA degree in 1967 after working there with David McCosh and Andy Vincent, two of Oregon's leading artists of the mid-20th century. A stint in the Army took him to Vietnam, where he worked as a graphic designer; when he returned to the U.S. he taught drawing, painting and design at Oregon State University.

Cruson's work is in the collections of the Victoria and Albert Museum in London, the Portland Art Museum, the Hallie Ford Museum of Art and the Jordan Schnitzer Museum of Art at the UO. Besides White Lotus, he sells work through the Hanson Howard Gallery in Ashland and the Lawrence Gallery in Lake Oswego.

Walk into the current exhibit at the White Lotus, and the first thing you notice is a lot of white. Cruson's paintings are all framed in simple, modern wooden frames painted white, a color that echoes the white shapes in the paintings that seem to dominate the room. Each seems to combine various perspectives looking down on a stark but colorful landscape below.

In “Contemplation No. 4,” a 24x48-inch panorama, a pure-white highway cuts into the frame heading up and left from the bottom before turning back to the right, twice, to isolate an area of flatland that’s a uniform tone of burnt sienna. In all these works, Cruson uses earth tones as if they were primary colors, creating intricate abstract compositions with the flat shapes — always accented by something in white.

Over much of his long career, Cruson has worked relentlessly with the same material — abstracted desert landscapes — that in lesser hands might become repetitive. Even for longtime fans of his work, this show seems fresh. ■

Contemplate: New Works by Jon Jay Cruson runs through May 20 at White Lotus Gallery, 767 Willamette Street. Hours are 10 am to 4 pm Tuesday through Saturday. More info at WLotus.com.

Ruston Kelly Comes to Eugene

THE COUNTRY DIRT EMO ARTIST IS TOURING FOR HIS NEW ALBUM THE WEAKNESS

By Caleb Barber

Bruce Springsteen said of being an artist, “You’re always in a box, and you’re an escape artist if you do what I do. You build your box, and then you escape from it.”

Ruston Kelly isn’t a huge Springsteen fan, he says, but that quote stuck with him. The Nashville-based artist is used to his music being categorized as Americana, country and folk rock, and his last few projects very much fit that bill.

But Kelly’s new album, The Weakness, was a new box.

“I feel like part of my job is to stay inspired,” Kelly says in a phone interview with Eugene Weekly. “You know, I’d be doing the fan base a disservice in the long run if I was only trying to copy/paste from what I’ve done before.”

Kelly’s inspirations extend beyond country and folk, like the bands City in Colour and Dashboard Confessional, which he names as some of his biggest inspirations for his early records. Chris Carrabba of Dashboard actually ended up working with Kelly on his Dirt Emo Vol. 1 album.

“It’s interesting that that scene seems to gravitate a bit towards my music, which is kind of cool because I listened to all of these people growing up,” Kelly says.

Kelly wrote the songs on The Weakness during his Shape and Destroy tour. The writing came quickly, Kelly says, but he knew he wanted to push himself to make this album sound unique.

He brought on Nate Mercereau, a multi-instrumentalist who’s produced and played on records with Jay-Z, Lizzo and The Weeknd, to help produce.

“It was the first time that I let someone take the reins, or be kind of like the leader in the studio,” Kelly says. “I wanted to be able to have stuff on there that I couldn’t necessarily come up with myself.” Kelly was listening to Radiohead’s Kid A, Nirvana’s MTV Unplugged, Sufjan Stevens’ Carrie and Lowell and The National while he was touring to immerse himself in production-heavy projects for inspiration.

“All these bands have a lot to say production-wise, it isn’t just about someone with a guitar singing a song and there’s production around it,” Kelly says.

Kelly says he wanted to approach producing this album in a different way.

He thought one of his tracks, “Wicked Hands,” was going to be “a kind of acoustic — like Dying Star — kind of thing. Moody.”

Mercereau would send him pre-production recording ideas to Kelly during his tour, and he sent Kelly a full-production version of “Wicked Hands.”

“We ended up doing like 40 different versions of that song,” Kelly says. “I’m glad we did that, because it pushed me in my understanding of what I’m capable of doing.”

Kelly describes the music he makes as belonging to a new genre he calls “dirt emo.”

Kelly says he thinks of his music as being a descendant of emo from the start, and he describes dirt emo as “confessional songwriting, confessional lyrics, emotional vulnerability to the max, with Americana or folk instrumentation on the periphery.”

By that definition, The Weakness is dirt emo through and through.

This is Kelly’s longest tour schedule to date, going from mid-April through most of September. It’s also Kelly’s first time stopping in Eugene.

The musician says he isn’t planning to work on another record for a while, and that his main focus is going to be pouring his energy into touring and gaining traction for The Weakness.

“My plan for this one was to kind of put everything that I currently have, artistically and personally, into this,” Kelly says, adding that you can expect to hear songs from every record on the tour. ■

Ruston Kelly will be performing with the Bozeman, Montana, folk-rock band Richy Mitch & The Coal Miners at the WOW Hall on May 9. Tickets are $25-30.

FREE WILL ASTROLOGY

BY ROB BREZSNY

ARIES (MARCH 21-APRIL 19): Before forming the band called The Beatles, John Lennon, George Harrison and Paul McCartney performed under various other names: the Quarrymen, Japage 3 and Johnny and the Moondogs. I suspect you are currently at your own equivalent of the Johnny and the Moondogs phase. You're building momentum. You're gathering the tools and resources you need. But you have not yet found the exact title, descriptor or definition for your enterprise. I suggest you be extra alert for its arrival in the coming weeks.

TAURUS (APRIL 20-MAY 20): I've selected a passage to serve as one of your prime themes during the rest of 2023. It comes from poet Jane Shore. She writes, "Now I feel I am learning how to grow into the space I was always meant to occupy, into a self I can know." Dear Taurus, you will have the opportunity to grow ever-more assured and self-possessed as you embody Shore's description in the coming months. Congratulations in advance on the progress you will make to more fully activate your soul's code.

GEMINI (MAY 21-JUNE 20): Georges Rouault (1871-1958) was a Gemini painter who bequeathed the world over 3,000 works of art. There might have been even more. But years before he died, he burned 315 of his unfinished paintings. He felt they were imperfect, and he would never have time or be motivated to finish them. I think the coming weeks would be a good time for you to enjoy a comparable purge, Gemini. Are there things in your world that don't mean much to you anymore and are simply taking up space? Consider the possibility of freeing yourself from their stale energy.

CANCER (JUNE 21-JULY 22): Britain occupied India for almost 200 years. It was a ruthless and undemocratic exploitation that steadily drained India's wealth and resources. Mahatma Gandhi wasn't the only leader who fought British oppression, but he was among the most effective. In 1930, he led a 24-day, 240-mile march to protest the empire's tyrannical salt tax. This action was instrumental in energizing the Indian independence movement that ultimately culminated in India's freedom. I vote to make Gandhi one of your inspirational role models in the coming months. Are you ready to launch a liberation project? Stage a constructive rebellion? Martial the collaborative energies of your people in a holy cause?

LEO (JULY 23-AUG. 22): As crucial as it is to take responsibility, it is also essential to recognize where our responsibilities end and what should be left for others to do. For example, we usually shouldn't do work for other people that they can just as easily do for themselves. We shouldn't sacrifice doing the work that only we can do and get sidetracked doing work that many people can do. To be effective and to find fulfillment in life, it's vital for us to discover what truly needs to be within our care and what should be outside of our care. I see the coming weeks as a favorable time for you to clarify the boundary between these two.

VIRGO (AUG. 23-SEPT. 22): Virgo-born Marie Laveau (1801-1881) was a powerful Voodoo priestess, herbalist, activist and midwife in New Orleans. According to legend, she could walk on water, summon clairvoyant visions, safely suck the poison out of a snake's jowls, and cast spells to help her clients achieve their heart's desires. There is also a wealth of more tangible evidence that she was a community activist who healed the sick, volunteered as an advocate for prisoners, provided free teachings, and did rituals for needy people who couldn't pay her. I hereby assign her to be your inspirational role model for the coming weeks. I suspect you will have extra power to help people in both mysterious and practical ways.

LIBRA (SEPT. 23-OCT. 22): What are the best methods to exorcize our personal demons, ghosts and goblins? Or at least subdue them and neutralize their ill effects? We all have such phantoms at work in our psyches, corroding our confidence and undermining our intentions. One approach I don't recommend is to get mad at yourself for having these interlopers. Never do that. The demons' strategy, you see, is to manipulate you into being mean and cruel to yourself. To drive them away, I suggest you shower yourself with love and kindness. That seriously reduces their ability to trick you and hurt you — and may even put them into a deep sleep. Now is an excellent time to try this approach.

SCORPIO (OCT. 23-NOV. 21): As she matured, Scorpio poet Sylvia Plath wrote, "I am learning how to compromise the wild dream ideals and the necessary realities without such screaming pain." I believe you're ready to go even further than Plath was able to, dear Scorpio. In the coming weeks, you could not merely "compromise" the wild dream ideals and the necessary realities. You could synergize them and get them to collaborate in satisfying ways. Bonus: I bet you will accomplish this feat without screaming pain. In fact, you may generate surprising pleasures that delight you with their revelations.

SAGITTARIUS (NOV. 22-DEC. 21): Some primates use herbal and clay medicines to self-medicate. Great apes, chimpanzees, bonobos and gorillas ingest a variety of ingredients that fight against parasitic infection and help relieve various gastrointestinal disturbances. (More info: tinyurl.com/PrimatesSelfMedicate.) Our ancestors learned the same healing arts, though far more extensively. And many Indigenous people today still practice this kind of self-care. With these thoughts in mind, Sagittarius, I urge you to spend quality time in the coming weeks deepening your understanding of how to heal and nurture yourself. The kinds of "medicines" you might draw on could be herbs, and may also be music, stories, colors, scents, books, relationships and adventures.

CAPRICORN (DEC. 22-JAN. 19): The mythic traditions of all cultures are replete with tales of clashes and combats. If we draw on these tales to deduce what activity humans enjoy more than any other, we might conclude that it's fighting with each other. But I hope you will avoid this normal habit as much as possible during the next three weeks, Capricorn. I am encouraging you to actively repress all inclinations to tangle. Just for now, I believe you will cast a wildly benevolent magic spell on your mental and physical health if you avoid arguments and skirmishes. Here's a helpful tip: In each situation you're involved in, focus on sustaining a vision of the most graceful, positive outcome.

AQUARIUS (JAN. 20-FEB. 18): Is there a person who could serve as your Über Mother for a while? This would be a wise and tender maternal ally who gives you the extra nurturing you need, along with steady doses of warm, crisp advice on how to weave your way through your labyrinthine decisions. Your temporary Über Mother could be any gender, really. They would love and accept you for exactly who you are, even as they stoke your confidence to pursue your sweet dreams about the future. Supportive and inspirational. Reassuring and invigorating. Championing you and consecrating you.

PISCES (FEB. 19-MARCH 20): Congratulations on acquiring the Big New Riddle! I trust it will inspire you to grow wiser and kinder and wilder over the coming months. I've compiled some clues to help you unravel and ultimately solve this challenging and fascinating mystery. 1. Refrain from calling on any strength that's stingy or pinched. Ally yourself solely with generous power. 2. Avoid putting your faith in trivial and irrelevant "benefits." Hold out for the most soulful assistance. 3. The answer to key questions may often be, "Make new connections and enhance existing connections."

Homework: Name three wonderful things you want to be experiencing one year from today. Newsletter: FreeWillAstrology.com.

SAVAGE LOVE

BY DAN SAVAGE

Shortly after our wedding my wife informed me that she would be handling our finances and making all financial decisions for us as a couple going forward. Additionally, she had already arranged for my paycheck to be automatically deposited into an account that only she had control over. I would henceforth get a meager weekly allowance for personal expenses. During that same conversation my wife informed me I would get sex only when I had earned it. I love her, and I reluctantly agreed to this. We have been married for ten years. I do all of the housework, and I rarely get sex. My wife tells me I have no one to blame but myself, since I agreed to all her terms from the beginning, which caused her to lose all respect for me as a man. I did not realize how difficult this would be. Is it normal for a wife in this kind of marriage to enjoy giving her husband pain? She is almost sadistic. She spansk my ass with a spatula and tells me I am a sissy. Is this normal?

— Shortly after our wedding my wife

Sure, it's perfectly normal — in the sense that it's perfectly normal for a certain kind of deeply frustrated kinky straight guy to beat off while writing me a fake letter about the kind of sexual relationship he's always fantasized about having but has never actually had before tacking on a fake question on at end in the hopes that I'll respond and then he'll able beat off to the whole thing all over again.

Zooming out for a second... the fake questions I get aren't the same as the dozens of fake questions YA writer Bennett Madison managed to get published in Slate's "Dear Prudence" over the years, and they're different than the presumed-to-be-fake questions to Slate's "Care and Feeding" that Ben Dreyfuss has so hilariously picked apart on his substack, CalmDown-Ben. What distinguishes the fake questions I get at "Savage Love" from other fake questions submitted to other advice columns is the obvious fapping that was going when the letter was being drafted.

There's a lot in SISSY's letter that screams fake — a normal person would've instantly filed for divorce, there's no way she could've "arranged" to have his paycheck automatically deposited into an account she alone controlled unless she somehow managed to bring his employer in on this conspiracy, that the best question he could come up with was the most banal question asked of sex-advice columnists ("Is this normal?") — but what screams fake the loudest, the absolute deadeast giveaway, is that this was sprung on him after his wedding.

There's a lot in SISSY's letter that screams fake — a normal person would've instantly filed for divorce, there's no way she could've "arranged" to have his paycheck automatically deposited into an account she alone controlled unless she somehow managed to bring his employer in on this conspiracy, that the best question he could come up with was the most banal question asked of sex-advice columnists ("Is this normal?") — but what screams fake the loudest, the absolute deadeast giveaway, is that this was sprung on him after his wedding.

"From my research, and from the emails and DMs I get about how to set up an FLR, the askers are overwhelmingly male," says Key Barrett, sex researcher and author of Surrender, Submit, Serve Her, a book on FLR. "And I have never heard of an FLR that was started unilaterally, or out of trickery, that managed to be successful."

Like a lot of people with fantasies rooted in power exchange, it's hotter for SISSY to think about it being imposed on him. Because then he's the victim, not the pervert, because then his submission is pure and unadulterated. But why send a fake question to a sex-advice column? Because getting his fantasy published makes it feel real. Or feel real. Or, hell, maybe in some alternate everything/everywhere kind of universe, it actually becomes real.

I'm a gay man in his forties with a gay man fiancé in his twenties. My fiancé just informed me that he has cheated on me with many others. He didn't tell me until after we had announced our engagement, set a date, and sent invitations to both our families and friends back home in Chicago, where I grew up and we met while training for a marathon. We now live in Los Angeles, the city where we moved so he could pursue his career as a model. He is young and very beautiful and while I was the aggressor at the start of our relationship, he gradually asserted himself and is now the more controlling person in the relationship. Things have to be his way. He wishes for me to remain faithful to him while he continues to enjoy the sexual attentions of other men. I am a handsome man who is frequently approached by attractive young men, but I have always declined their advances because I am devoted to my gay man fiancé. Canceling the wedding would be embarrassing but the thought of marrying him knowing he has so freely given himself to other men and will continue to do so has broken my heart almost in half. My fiancé holds me while I cry myself to sleep at night. The dilemma I face: Do I break off our engagement and leave him and cleave my heart completely in two? Or do I marry him knowing he will never change?

— Feeling Insecure And Needing Clarifying Edicts

So, it's not just deeply frustrated kinky straight men who send me these kinds of fake questions. ("Help! Help! This terrible thing I've been furiously beating off about all my life has suddenly happened to me!") As FIANCE's letter demonstrates, sometimes it's a deeply frustrated kinky gay man who's out there beating off while he writes me a letter. And on rare occasions, I get a fake question from a woman — and something about this letter (its idealized images of gay men, awkward phrases like "gay man fiancé") has me thinking it might've been written by a woman who has read too much and/or authored to much and/or illustrated too much shounen-ai manga and/or yaoi manga.

But whoever wrote this obviously fake question, it shares the same fakey-fake-fake DNA with the other two fake questions in this week's column: a power-exchange kink like FLR, forced bi, cuckolding, etc., all kinks likelier to be proposed by a submissive (because most people into these kinks fantasize about being in the sub role), was in this case — this very special, very exceptional, and very hot (to the letter writer) case — imposed by a cruel wife, girlfriend, fiancé, etc.

I get a lot of letters like these and, in all honesty, I don't mind reading them; I don't share them often — I don't get many columns out of them — but they do provide me with a fascinating glimpse into the sexual inner lives of a very special subset of my readers. But guys... SISSY, TRAPPED, FIANCE, and all the other guys out there whose fake questions didn't make it into this week's column... if you were to put half as much effort into finding partners who want what you want and/or partners who might grow to like what you want as you out into writing and sending me fake questions... you might actually get to live out some of those fantasies of yours.
